mast

It had, but only for the worse. On the second day of the voyage, a wild hurricane blew, and the howling wind quickly drove the ship so far off the course that the captain had no idea where they were. Robinson felt horribly sick, and grimly held onto a mast. Page 9

foaming

The crew wrestled the lifeboat into the sea, and they all jumped in. But in no time at all, a giant wave had swamped them. Robinson fell into the foaming sea and felt himself being sucked down. Page 11

hardship

What point was there in everything he'd done since the shipwreck? There was probably nothing ahead of him but years of solitude and hardship and struggle, and finally a sad, lonely death. pg 41

fleece

Challenge: can you find the sentence for this word? Once you find it write it below:

solitude

What point was there in everything he'd done since the shipwreck? There was probably nothing ahead of him but years of solitude and hardship and struggle, and finally a sad, lonely death. pg 41

nagging

That evening, Robinson sat in his cave surrounded by his supplies in their neat piles. He found, a memory nagging somewhere at the back of his mind. Pg 33

dozing

He lit a fire and sat beside it to eat supper with Toby dozing next to him. Freckles and Rufus had found them, and cuddled up to each other and the dog. Page 27

timber

The food would keep him going while he worked out what the island had to offer. And of course there were other things to be had on such a vessel –ropes and timber and canvas, tools and nails for starters. Pg 21
